

John Leatherman - Introduction Biography 07-10

Dr. John Leatherman is a Professor in the Department of Agricultural Economics at Kansas State University and Local Government Specialist with K-State Research & Extension. He also is the Director of the Office of Local Government, an educational outreach and technical assistance program for city and county governments in Kansas. He has worked with the Cooperative Extension Service since 1984 in areas of community and regional economic development policy and practice, local government and public finance, and natural resources management. Research interests include economic and fiscal impact analysis, regional economic modeling, rural development and policy analysis, local public finance, natural resource management and environmental protection, and public service organization and efficiency.