

STERLING LIDDELL

Vice President, Food and AgriBusiness Research
Rabo AgriFinance

Sterling Liddell is a vice president for Rabo AgriFinance (RAF) and Rabobank International in its Food & Agribusiness Research and Advisory (FAR) department. In this role, he is responsible for analyzing the grains and oilseeds sector. In addition, he also coordinates research efforts for RAF in the U.S.

Mr. Liddell is an agricultural economist with strong experience in U.S. grains and oilseeds production and markets. Previously, he worked as a senior research and development analyst with the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation where he managed a department of four analysts and was responsible for designing the department's research infrastructure. During that time, Mr. Liddell also held an interest in an agricultural consultancy business that, among other things, focused on designing decision tools for clients in the animal protein sector to optimize feed purchasing. Before joining the Farm Bureau, Mr. Liddell worked as an economist with Pioneer Hi-Bred International in Johnson, Iowa.

Mr. Liddell has a Bachelor of Science from Utah State University with a dual major in agriculture and business. Additionally, he has a Masters of Business Administration; International Supply Chain Management Transatlantic Degree jointly awarded by the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester, U.K., and Utah State University.