Overview

- The national economy continues to recover, with strong GDP and job growth in 2021, but above normal inflation

- Regional businesses are optimistic, despite rising prices and labor shortages, and energy activity is up

- Oklahoma jobs are still down from pre-pandemic levels, though, especially in energy

- The latest surge in COVID cases and hospitalizations has not resulted in much slowdown in economic activity
Sept FOMC: “Indicators of economic activity and employment have continued to strengthen.”

Labor force participation is also almost at pre-pandemic levels in Oklahoma, although it has eased recently.
Still, jobs in some sectors, especially mining (oil and gas), remain down considerably from early 2020.
Oil and natural gas prices have risen considerably, and are highly profitable for most regional firms.
