

Ana Patricia Muñoz, Federal Reserve Bank of Boston

Ana Patricia Muñoz is a policy analyst in the community development unit of the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston. She previously worked as a Research Associate in the Boston Fed's research department. She has been contributing to the Community Affairs economic development efforts in Springfield, Massachusetts, studying economic and labor force conditions in Springfield and other older industrial cities. Originally from Ecuador, she spent two years working as an economic advisor for a congressman in the National Parliament of Ecuador. Ana Patricia received a B.S. in economics from the Pontificia Universidad Católica del Ecuador. She has a master's degree in economics from the Université de Montréal and a master's degree in public affairs from Brown University.