

Envision a U.S. economy that works for everyone

August 04, 2021

Imagine an economy where racial and gender economic disparities in the labor market no longer exist. Would there be more shared prosperity for everyone? That's the question behind a new state gross domestic product (GDP) simulation from community development experts across the Federal Reserve System.

A team of Federal Reserve community development experts conducted a thought experiment to find out.

Visit the interactive dashboard to select a state and find out how GDP would have increased annually if racial or gender gaps, or both, were eliminated for key measures: average hourly earnings, educational attainment, employment-to-population ratio and hours worked. (Check out the methodology for more details.)
