

Economic prosperity in Indian Country the focus of research summit

September 23, 2022

As part of its mission to support tribal economic prosperity, the Center for Indian Country Development (CICD) at the Federal Reserve Bank of Minneapolis conducts and supports policy-relevant research on key questions that matter for Indian Country. The theme of the 2022 CICD annual research summit is Unlocking Our Full Economic Potential. The virtual summit is 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. CT, December 1-2, 2022. It is free of charge. The summit is intended for anyone who cares about better research that can help tribes achieve their economic and social objectives. Join tribal leaders, social science researchers, policymakers, and others as they learn about and discuss the latest research that can help tribal economies flourish. Even if you can't attend the entire event, organizers welcome your participation.

Researchers will briefly present their findings in an accessible way, with tribal leaders and practitioners giving their reactions, followed by panel discussions. In addition, researchers will identify what policymakers can learn from the research evidence, and tribal leaders will explain what they'd like to know from future research.
