Jeffrey H. Dorfman, Professor, Agricultural and Applied Economics, University of Georgia

Mr. Dorfman is a professor of agricultural and applied economics at the University of Georgia where he also is director of the Land Use Studies Initiative. His research focuses on applied statistical analysis of economic and regulatory problems and the economics of land use, land preservation, land development and land regulation.

He has been co-editor of both the American Journal of Agricultural Economics and the Journal of Agribusiness and associate editor of the American Journal of Agricultural Economics.